Toy Trouble

“Wow!” Kirsty Tate gasped, her eyes wide with amazement. “This is the biggest toy store I’ve ever seen!”

Her best friend, Rachel Walker, laughed. “I know,” she agreed. “Isn’t it great?”

Kirsty nodded. Wherever she turned, there was something wonderful to see. In one corner of the toy store was a huge display of dolls in every shape and size, along with an amazing number of dollhouses. A special, roped-off area was filled with remote-control cars, buses, trucks, and airplanes. Nearby stood rows of bikes, skateboards, and scooters.

Shelves were piled high with every board game Kirsty could think of, plus stacks of computer games. Colorful kites hung from the ceiling, along with big balloons and spinning mobiles. Kirsty had never seen anything like it, and this was only the first floor!

“Look over there, Kirsty,” Rachel said, pointing at the dolls.

Kirsty saw a sign that read MEET FAIRY FLORENCE AND HER FRIENDS. She stared at the dolls displayed around the sign. Fairy Florence wore a long pink dress. She looked boring and old-fashioned. Kirsty and Rachel glanced at each other and burst out laughing.

“Fairy Florence doesn’t look like a real fairy at all!” Rachel whispered, and Kirsty nodded.

Rachel and Kirsty knew what real fairies looked like because they'd met them...many times! The two girls had often visited Fairyland to help their fairy friends when they were in trouble. The problems were usually caused by icy Jack Frost. He was always making trouble with the help of his mean goblins.

Just a few days earlier, King Oberon and Queen Titania had asked Rachel and Kirsty to help them. Jack Frost had stolen the seven magic jewels from the queen's crown. The jewels were very important, because they controlled a lot of the magic in Fairyland.

Jack Frost had wanted the magic for himself, but after the heat and light of the jewels began to melt his ice castle, he had angrily thrown the gems far into the human world. Now it was up to the girls to return the jewels to Fairyland, before the fairies' magic ran out for good.
