A Pony Ride

“Let’s go, Jet!” Kirsty Tate shook the reins and Jet, the black pony she was riding, set off along the forest trail. Kirsty grinned over at her best friend, Rachel Walker, who was sitting on a chestnut mare named Annie. The two girls had come to Bramble Stables for an afternoon pony ride. “This is the perfect day for riding,” Kirsty said happily, feeling the warm sun on her face.

“And the perfect way to end our visit together,” Rachel agreed.

The girls exchanged a secret smile.

“We still need to find Penny the Pony Fairy’s pet pony,” Kirsty said thoughtfully. “I really hope we can rescue her before you have to go home, Rachel.”

Rachel nodded. “Well, we’re definitely in the right place to spot her,” she said. “This is pony heaven!”

After a few minutes, the trail took the riders past a large pond with a few white geese bobbing serenely on its surface.

“Oh, and there’s a squirrel up there in that tree!” Rachel said. She showed Kirsty where it was perched on a branch, watching the horses go by with bright eyes.

Suddenly, Kirsty spotted a flash of green disappearing in the trees. What’s that? she murmured to herself, peering through the leaves. But then she gasped. “Oh, Rachel, look,” she whispered. “It’s a goblin!”
