The Magical Missing Candle: Darkness Falls

Mrs. Tate popped her head around the door. “Are you ready, girls?” she asked. “It’s time for the Christmas Fair.”

“Coming, Mom,” Kristy said, jumping up.

“I’m really glad I could come and visit,” said Rachel Walker, as she followed her best friend into the hall to get their coats. Rachel was visiting over Christmas break. Her parents were picking her up on Christmas Eve.

“Me, too,” Kristy replied. “You’re going to love the fair. And who knows. . . we might even see a Christmas fairy!”

Rachel and Kristy thought they were the luckiest girls in the world, because they had become friends with the fairies!

Whenever the fairies were in trouble, they asked the girls for help. Usually cold Jack Frost was causing magical mayhem with the help of his nasty goblins.

“I forgot to tell you!” Kristy said, pulling on her boots. “Every year, someone from my school is chosen to be the fair’s Christmas King or Queen. This year, it’s my friend, Molly.”

“Wow! I bet she’s really excited,” said Rachel, smiling. “I’d love to be the Christmas Queen!” Kristy nodded as her parents joined them.

“Everybody ready?” Mrs. Tate said. “Then let’s go!”

“Did someone turn off the Christmas Tree lights?” Mr. Tate asked. “They were on a few minutes ago, but now they’re not.”

Everyone shook their heads. Kristy peeked into the living room, where the tree stood. “The switch is still on,” she pointed out.

“The lights must be broken,” Mr. Tate decided. “Never mind, I’ll fix them when we get back.”
