Book: Molly the Goldfish Fairy

Gnome, Sweet Gnome

‘Slow down, Dad,’ Kirsty Tate called. ‘You’re leaving us behind!’ ‘Sorry,’ Mr Tate stopped and waited for Kirsty, Rachel and Mrs Tate to catch up. ‘I’m feeling hungry, and you know how good the Wainwrights’ barbecues always are. In fact...’ He sniffed the air. ‘I think I can smell the food cooking from here!’

‘We’re still two streets away!’ Kirsty said, grinning and shaking her head at her best friend Rachel who burst out laughing.

Mr and Mrs Tate walked on and the girls followed.

‘We’ll have a good time at the barbeque,’ Kirsty said, smiling at Rachel who was staying with her for the holidays. ‘The Wainwrights have got a huge garden. It’s lovely.’

‘Great!’ Rachel said eagerly. Then she lowered her voice. ‘Don’t forget, we must look out for the fairy pets!’

‘Kirsty nodded. ‘The fairies are depending on us,’ she whispered. Rachel and Kirsty had never told anyone their very special secret. They had become friends with the fairies and now, whenever their magical friends were in trouble, the girls always tried to help. Jack Frost often caused problems in Fairyland, and now he had stolen the seven magic animals belonging to the Pet Keeper Fairies.

But the mischievous pets had managed to escape from Jack Frost and his goblin servants into the human world. Rachel and Kirsty were determined to find all the pets and restore them to their fairy owners before the goblins captured them and took them back to Jack Frost again.

‘Well, we’ve found five pets,’ Kirsty went on, as they turned into the Wainwrights’ street.
