Girls Go Dancing

“Strike!” cheered Kirsty Tate, as Rachel’s ball sent all ten pins flying at the end of the bowling lane.

“Hurrah!” Rachel cried in delight.

“That’s your third strike of the game!” Kirsty’s dad said, smiling.
“Well done, Rachel.”

“And it looks like you won the game, too!” Mrs Tate added, gazing up at the electronic scoreboard in front of her.

The girls went to see. Sure enough, flashing green letters spelled out ‘RACHEL WINS’ on the screen.

“Yay!” Rachel said. “I’m having the best holiday ever – and it’s only just begun!”

She and Kirsty grinned at each other. Rachel was staying with Kirsty’s family for the autumn half-term holiday, and the two girls always had very exciting adventures whenever they were together.

Fairy adventures! This time was no different. Only yesterday, they'd met the seven Dance Fairies, who'd asked for their help. The girls had said yes straightaway. They loved helping the fairies!

“Well, girls,” Mr Tate said as the scoreboard flashed ‘GAME OVER’. “It’s time to take off your bowling shoes, and put on your dancing shoes. It’s the school disco this evening, remember?”

“I can’t wait,” Kirsty said eagerly. “Rachel and I love dancing, don’t we?”

Rachel nodded, knowing Kirsty was thinking about the Dance Fairies. “Definitely,” she replied. “Come on, let’s go!”

Once they were back at the Tates’ house, the girls got changed for the disco in Kirsty’s bedroom. Rachel was wearing a pretty purple party dress, and Kirsty picked out a pink sparkly top and a pair of black trousers.

“I can’t wait to see all your friends again,” Rachel said, brushing her hair in front of the mirror. “I really enjoyed meeting them at your birthday party. It’ll be great to dance with them tonight.”

Kirsty went over to check that her door was closed properly. “We might even get to see another of the Dance Fairies too!” she added in a low voice.

“I hope so,” Rachel said eagerly.

Yesterday, she and Kirsty had met all seven Dance Fairies and been magically whisked away to Fairyland, where they’d learned that the Dance Fairies’ magical ribbons had been stolen by the bad fairy, Jack Frost.

The fairies had explained that the magic ribbons made sure that dancing went smoothly and was fun, for everyone in Fairyland as well as in the human world. Jack Frost had stolen the ribbons because he wanted his goblins to be able to dance well at a party he was throwing.

Rachel and Kirsty, together with the Dance Fairies and the Fairy King and Queen, had gone to Jack Frost’s ice castle to try and get the ribbons back.

But, when he saw them coming, sneaky Jack Frost had sent all the ribbons into the human world, along with a goblin to guard each one.

Yesterday, the girls had helped Bethany the Ballet Fairy find the goblin with her Ballet Ribbon, and they’d got the ribbon safely back, but they’d been shocked to discover that Jack Frost had given his goblin servants a new magical power.

While they had the ribbons, the goblins could freeze anything they wanted with their master's icy magic!

Kirsty picked up a hair-clip and began fastening it in her hair. Then she stopped and looked at Rachel with a worried expression. "I've just had a thought," she said. "What if the school disco is ruined because the Disco Ribbon is still missing?"

Rachel bit her lip. "I hope it's not," she said. "It would be awful if the school dance was spoilt. We'll have to look out for the goblin, and hope that we can get the magic ribbon back to Jade the Disco Fairy before anything goes wrong."

Kirsty nodded. "I don't like the thought of meeting another goblin who can freeze us," she shivered, "but we've got to try and save the disco!"
