Toy Trouble

‘Wow!’ Kirsty Tate gasped, her eyes wide with amazement. ‘This is the biggest toy shop I’ve ever seen!’

Her best friend, Rachel Walker, laughed. ‘I know’ she agreed. ‘It’s brilliant, isn’t it?’

Kirsty nodded. Wherever she turned, there was something wonderful to see.

In one corner of the toy shop was an enormous display of dolls in every shape and size, together with a spectacular array of dolls’ houses. A special, rope off area was filled with remote-control cars, buses, lorries and aeroplanes, and nearby stood rows of bikes, trikes and silver scooters.

Shelves were piled high with every single board game Kirsty had ever heard of, stacks of electronic games and a variety of computer consoles. Colourful kites hung from the ceiling, along with multi-coloured balloons and marvellous mobiles. Kirsty had never seen anything like it, and this was on the ground floor!

‘Look over there, Kirsty,’ Rachel said, pointing at the dolls. Kirsty saw a sign saying, Meet Fairy Florence and her friends. She stared at the dolls grouped around the pink sign. Fairy Florence wore a long pink dress, and looked rather dull and old-fashioned. Kirsty and Rachel glanced at each other and burst out laughing.

‘Fairy Florence doesn’t look anything like a real fairy!’ Rachel whispered, and Kirsty nodded.
