Wishes in the Air

'I wish this rain would stop,' Kirsty Tate said to her friend, Rachel Walker, as they splashed through the puddles on the busy shopping street. 'My trainers are soaked.' She pulled the rainbow-coloured umbrella she was holding further down over their heads.

'Mine, too' Rachel said. 'Still I'm glad we came into town today. I got the perfect present for Danny's birthday party next week.' She swung the shopping bag she was holding. It contained a bright red, turbo-charged water pistol that Rachel was sure Danny, her six-year-old cousin would love.

'I wish I was going to be here for the party,' sighed Kirsty.
'Me too. I can't believe you're going home tomorrow,' Rachel told her. 'This week's gone too quickly.'

'Too quickly,' replied Kirsty. 'I just hope we find another jewel today.'

The two girls exchanged a look. They shared an incredible secret. They were best friends with the fairies! They'd helped the fairies out lots of times in the past when nasty Jack Frost had been causing trouble. Now they'd been asked to help again.

This time, Jack Frost had stolen seven magic jewels from Queen Titania's tiara. The jewels controlled special fairy powers and the fairies needed them back so that they could recharge their magic wands. But Jack Frost had banished the jewels to the human world and sent his mean goblin servants to guard them.
