A Special Street Party

‘Look at all these stalls, Rachel,’ Kirsty Tate said, pointing down the street where she lived. ‘This is going to be a great party!’

All of Kirsty’s neighbours were bustling around setting up stalls outside their houses. There were all sorts of things going on, from games and raffles to stalls selling bric-a-brac and cakes. Delicious smells wafted towards the girls from the barbeque at the other end of the street. The road was closed to traffic, and people were already milling around in the sunshine enjoying the fête.

‘I think having a street party is a great idea,’ Rachel Walker, Kirsty’s best friend, said with a grin. ‘I wish we had one in our street back home.’ Rachel had come to stay with Kirsty for a week of the Easter holidays.

Kirsty was opening the last box of books. ‘We’d better hurry and put these on the stall,’ she said. ‘Lots of people are arriving now.’

‘I’m glad the party is today, before I go home tomorrow,’ Rachel said, helping Kirsty arrange books on the stall that Mr and Mrs Tate were running. ‘I hope we raise loads of money for charity.’

‘We always do’ said Kirsty happily, stacking the books neatly. ‘Lots of people come to the party from all over town. But...’ she lowered her voice, ‘...we’ll have to be extra-careful this year, won’t we?’

Rachel nodded solemnly. ‘Yes,’ she agreed. ‘A party means we must keep our eyes open for goblin mischief!’
