‘Goodbye, Mum!’ Kirsty Tate called, waving from the mini-bus packed with Brownies as it pulled away from the church hall.

‘Goodbye Mrs Tate!’ Rachel Walker, Kirsty’s best friend, shouted, waving too.

As the mini-bus made its way through the village, Rachel turned to Kirsty. ‘Isn’t it great of your Brownie leader to let me come to your mini-jamboree?’ she said happily.

‘Well, you are staying with me this week, so I wouldn’t leave you behind,’ laughed Kirsty. ‘And you’re a Brownie too, even if you’re not in our pack.’

Rachel nodded. Both she and Kirsty were wearing their Brownie uniforms. ‘I’m really looking forward to this,’ she said eagerly. ‘What did you do last year?’

‘We joined up with another Brownie pack – just like we’re doing this time_ so there will be loads of us,’ Kirsty explained. ‘We played games, ran races, and there were lots of prizes. Then we had a barbeque round the camp fire.’ She grinned. ‘It was just a big party really!’

Rachel’s eyes opened wide. ‘A party?’ she gasped. ‘You know what that means...’

Kirsty clapped her hand to her mouth. ‘Oh, I didn’t realize!’ she said. ‘Of course, we’ll have to be on the look out for the goblins...’
