

Book: Mia the Bridesmaid Fairy

The Silver Sixpence

Wedding Plans

'Isn't it exciting that we're going to be Esther's bridesmaids?' said Rachel Walker happily.

'Yes, I can hardly wait for next Saturday!' replied Kirsty Tate, smiling at her best friend. 'And it'll be twice as much fun with you here!'

The girls were in Kenbury, the pretty little village where Esther, Kirsty's cousin, had grown up. The sun was shining brightly and there wasn't a cloud in the sky. It was perfect wedding weather.

Esther, Mrs Tate and Aunt Isabel, Esther's mum, were in the wedding dress shop, but the girls had popped out to look at the lovely church where Esther was going to get married.

'Oh Kirsty, look!' Cried Rachel. 'There must be a wedding today!'

People were arriving in their best clothes, carrying cameras and little boxes of confetti.

'And there's the vicar!' Kirsty added in excitement.

A lady in a long cassock was standing at the church gate.

'Hello girls,' she said smiling. 'Are you here for the wedding?'

www.rainbowmagic.co.uk

‘Not today,’ said Kirsty, smiling back at her. ‘My cousin Esther is getting married here next Saturday, and we’re her bridesmaids.’

‘We’ve just been looking at the wedding dress,’ added Rachel.

She pointed at a little shop across the road. Above the window hung an old fashioned: ‘Bella’s Wedding Magic’.

Rachel and Kirsty caught each other’s eyes and grinned. They knew all about magic, because they shared an amazing secret. They were good friends with the Rainbow Magic fairies, and they often helped them to defeat mean Jack Frost and his naughty goblin servants.

A cream car drew up outside the church, and a smart chauffer jumped out and opened the back door. Inside, the girls could see a woman wearing a frothy white dress.

‘It’s the bride!’ Rachel exclaimed. ‘Isn’t she lovely!’

‘See you next week then, girls,’ smiled the vicar. ‘I’ve got a wedding to perform!’

Rachel and Kirsty said goodbye and walked back to the wedding shop.

‘I love the dress in the window!’ said Kirsty.

‘Me too,’ Rachel agreed.

Under an archway of roses, an exquisite wedding dress was surrounded by sprays of real flowers.

‘Bella’s such an amazing dress maker!’ Kirsty said, with a happy sigh.

www.rainbowmagic.co.uk

Just then, Aunt Isabel popped her head out of the shop door.

‘Girls, come back inside,’ she said with a beaming smile. ‘Bella is ready for you to try on your dresses.’

Rachel and Kirsty hurried to the room at the back of the shop. Bella held up two exquisite dresses and the girls’ eyes widened.

Read the rest of Mia the Bridesmaid Fairy and discover what magic happens next!

www.rainbowmagic.co.uk