Goblindon

'Isn't it a gorgeous day, Kirsty?' said Rachel Walker happily. She and her best friend, Kirsty Tate, were walking along a country path not far from the Walker's house, enjoying the sunshine. 'And it would be even better if we could find another Magic Sporty Object!'

'Yes!' Kirsty agreed. 'The Fairyland Olympics start tomorrow, and Alice the Tennis Fairy's Magic Racquet and Gemma the Gymnastics Fairy's Magic Hoop is still missing.'

Rachel and Kirsty had promised to help their friends, the Sporty Fairies, find their seven Magic Sporty Objects. Sports in both the human and the fairy worlds were being disrupted because these objects had been stolen by Jack Frost and his goblin servants.

Jack Frost was determined that his goblin team would win the Fairyland Olympics and the cup filled with good luck.

He knew that the power of the Magic Sporty Objects meant that anyone close to one of them immediately became brilliant at that particular sport, so he had sent his goblins into the human world with each object, and told them to practice for the games.

As the girls walked on down the lane, Rachel suddenly noticed a strange sign pinned to a tree. 'Look at that,' she remarked, pointing it out to Kirsty. The words on the sign had been painted very messily in bright green paint.

'Goblindon,' Kirsty read out loud. 'And there's an arrow with the words 'Entrance to Tippington Tennis Club- this way' written underneath it,' she added.
